

How can I stop gambling online?

There are a few strategies you can consider to help you make accessing remote gambling more difficult. Keep in mind that physical barriers may only be part of the solution and you may need to explore the reasons why your gambling has become a problem in the first place.

Things you can do:

- Consider downloading software that will block or manage your access to gambling sites
- Move your computer into a communal area in the home where you are in view of others
- Ask your mobile phone or interactive TV provider to limit or block access to gambling services
- Consider self-excluding from online gambling sites

Is online gambling getting in the way of the life you want to live?

Online or remote gambling refers to any form of gambling accessed through the internet, using a smartphone, tablet or wireless handset or through interactive TV. While any form of gambling comes with a risk, easy access to gambling remotely may cause additional difficulties.

Callers to the National Gambling HelpLine, operated by GamCare and funded by GambleAware, who have a problem with online or remote gambling often reflect on the following:

- Loss of a sense of reality regarding time and money spent gambling
- The speed at which they have lost money and the ability to chase losses immediately
- Difficulty in avoiding access and exposure to remote gambling opportunities
- That they didn't fully understand how gambling remotely worked or were overwhelmed by the speed

“The problem for me was that I started so well. I was winning to start with and thought I was a pro. Then I started to lose and got scared...I was chasing my losses...I really enjoyed it in the early days, always secretly believing that I could make money out of it on a long term basis. I am currently in debt and have to stop before it gets further out of control.”

Self-exclusion

Self-exclusion is a process by which you can ask a gambling operator to exclude you from gambling with them for a set length of time – usually between six months and five years. Self-exclusion on its own might not be enough, but it can support you in your recovery.

If you have difficulty staying away from a particular site, try self-excluding while you seek additional help. You can contact individual operators directly ask to exclude yourself. Be clear that you have a gambling problem and do not wish to carry on. You should not need to renew the exclusion if it expires, but it is best to check.

If you don't want to visit the site(s) again, a new national multi-operator online self-exclusion scheme has now launched, called GAMSTOP.

GAMSTOP lets you put controls in place to restrict your online gambling activities. You will be prevented from using gambling websites and apps run by companies licensed in Great Britain, for a period of your choosing.

We understand that asking to be excluded can be daunting. If you would like to talk to someone about this, you can speak to one of our trained Advisers via the National Gambling HelpLine, on Freephone 0808 8020 133 or via web chat at www.gamcare.org.uk.

Blocking software

Blocking software is a computer programme that limits access to web sites or other services available over the internet.

Specific gambling blocking software is designed to block access to gambling websites on different devices. Have a look at our website for more information on the options available.

Protecting minors

Parents and guardians should limit the likelihood that children will be able to gamble remotely. Underage gambling illegal, and young people are particularly at risk of developing problems when they gamble.

What you can do:

- Use parental controls on your home computer to restrict access to gambling websites
- Consider installing content 'filtering' software such as NetNanny (www.netnanny.com)
- If you have a gambling account, be sure to protect your passwords and do not leave the computer unattended while you are logged on
- Do not leave your credit cards, debit cards or PIN where a child may find them

If you are concerned your child may be gambling remotely, talk with them calmly and try to understand their reasons for wanting to gamble.

Keep in mind that they may not be ready to talk or may be in denial of the problem. Contact the National Gambling HelpLine if you would like support or advice - our service can be accessed over the phone on 0808 8020 133 or online via our NetLine at www.gamcare.org.uk

GamCare also provides an online Forum and Chatrooms for people who are suffering through their own or someone else's gambling problems to come together to share advice and support. For more information visit www.gamcare.org.uk
